Jon Stolzer of Canine Inc. Shares His Expertise on Adopting a Pet from a Local Animal Shelter

Animal shelters are your best source when looking for a pet. These pets are just waiting for new homes because they were obtained by someone with unrealistic expectations of the time, effort and money required to maintain a lifelong relationship with their pet. Here are a few tips by Expert Canine Behaviorist and Training Specialist, Jon Stolzer of Canine Inc., as to what people should be looking for when adopting a four-legged friend.

1. Match your dog to your lifestyle, not your lifestyle to your dog. Determine what your lifestyle is and this will help you choose the right breed and size of your new companion.
2. When you walk through a shelter, choose a dog based on their body language and energy. Dogs may run to the front of the kennel, put their paws on the cage and give you that take me home look. While you may feel that they are choosing you, these pups are demonstrating demanding behavior. It is best to look for a dog that is engaging, but not overbearing.
